“ The art of film-making is to come to the brink of bankruptcy and stare it in the face. – A.K.

Anyone who gets a raw deal in a film studio is no more deserving of pity than someone who gets beaten up in a brothel. A gentleman has no business in either place. – A.K.

When my friends and I were young in Hungary, we all dreamed of being poets. And what did we become? We became politicians and advertisement men and film producers. – A.K.

He represented, and indeed virtually created, the tradition of quality in the British cinema. – Andrew Sarris

His engaging personality and charm of manner must be resisted. His promises, even when they are sincere, are worthless. A very dominant man and very dangerous to converse with owing to (among other things) his powers of persuasion. – Internal memo of the Prudential Assurance Company, which backed Korda

Kuleshov, Lev (1899–1970)

Influential and precocious Russian director, screenwriter and theorist. Born in Tambov, he studied painting at the Fine Arts School in Moscow, worked as a set designer from 1916 and began publishing theoretical articles on film from his late teens. He demonstrated the possibilities of manipulating an audience's reaction through editing, by juxtaposing the same shot of an actor with different objects to suggest various emotions. This 'Kuleshov effect', and his theories of montage, influenced Eisenstein and other directors. He was involved in the establishment of the First National Film School in Moscow, where he also taught. After many controversies, he stopped directing for a time from the early 30s. In the mid-40s he was appointed director of the State Institute of Cinematography in Moscow. Married actress Alexandra Khokhlova. His books include Art of the Cinema, published in 1929, and Fundamentals of Film Direction, published in 1941.

Books: 1997, Lev Kuleshov: Fifty Years in Film, ed. Ekaterina Khokhlova.

“ An actor's play reaches the spectator just as the editor requires it to, because the spectator himself completes the connected shots and sees in it what has been suggested to him by the montage. – L.K.

Kuleshov maintained that film art does not begin when the artists act and the various scenes are shot – this is only the preparation of the material. Film art begins from the moment when the director begins to combine and join together the various pieces of film. – Vsevolod Pudovkin

Kurosawa, Akira (1910–1998)
Distinguished Japanese film director and screenwriter who revealed the splendours of Japanese cinema to the West when his Rashomon was shown at the Cannes Film Festival. Born in Tokyo, he planned to be a painter before, in the mid-30s, joining as an assistant director what was to become Toho studios. There he also wrote scripts before getting the opportunity to direct in the early 40s. His postwar films were to make an international star of actor Toshiro Mifune and also featured notable collaborations with composer Fumio Hayasaka and, later, Masura Sato. His samurai epics, especially Yojimbo and The Seven Samurai, were copied by Hollywood and the Italian directors of spaghetti westerns. Noted for his meticulous and painstaking approach to writing, production and rehearsals, he found it hard to get the necessary financial backing from the mid-60s and attempted suicide in 1971. His later films depended on finance from outside Japan.

Autobiography: 1982, Something Like an Autobiography.

Other books: 1985, The Films of Akira Kurosawa by Donald Richie.

Ladd, Alan (1913–1964)
Unsmiling, pint-sized tough-guy American star who proved to be just the kind of hero the 40s wanted. Born in Hot Springs, Arkansas, he worked in a variety of jobs, including as a grip on the Warner lot, before beginning to get small roles on stage and in films. Handicapped by his size – he was 5 feet 5 inches tall – and his lack of expression, he nevertheless became a star with This Gun for Hire, in which he played, for the first of several times, opposite Veronica Lake; by 1947 he was among the top ten stars. He never displayed much interest in the techniques of acting. According to Robert Emmett Dolan, one of Ladd's friends met him and said that he'd noticed the star was about to start a new picture. Ladd replied that he'd yet to read the script. 'That must be kind of disturbing,' said his friend. 'Sure is,' said Ladd. 'I don't know what I'm going to wear.' His career declined from the early 50s, a slump exacerbated by his heavy drinking. He died as the result of an overdose of sleeping pills combined with a high level of alcohol, a probable suicide. His career owed much to his second wife, agent and former actress Sue Carol. He was the father of producer Alan Ladd, Jnr.

Ladd is said to have turned down both the James Dean role in Giant and the Spencer Tracy role in Bad Day at Black Rock.

When she spoke one did not listen, one just watched her mouth moving and marvelled at the exquisite shapes made by her lips. – George Sanders
She married a European multimillionaire, Fritz Mandl, and was terribly unhappy in the marriage. She went to the opera with him one night, loaded down with a fortune in jewels. He kept these in his safe and only gave them to her to wear on important occasions. Halfway through the performance she told him that she was sick. 'I don't want to spoil your evening,' she said. 'I'll go home, but you stay and see the rest.' She convinced him, went home alone, took the suitcases she had packed and her jewels and took off. Eventually she ended up in Hollywood – Paul Henreid

Lane, Lupino (1892–1959) (Henry George Lupino)
Diminutive, dapper British stage comedian and master of the pratfall, member of a family who had been clowns for generations. His American two-reelers of the 20s were little masterpieces of timing and hair-raising stunts, but he failed to develop a personality for sound. On his return to Britain from Hollywood, he directed one of the first British musicals, No Lady, and went to work at Elstree for British International Pictures as a director, before returning to his first love, the stage, climaxing in the long-running musical Me and My Girl featuring his singing of 'The Lambeth Walk'.

Lang, Fritz (1890–1976)
Monocled Austrian-born director, who became one of Germany's greatest silent film directors before moving to Hollywood in the mid-30s. He tended thereafter to make commercial though rather heavy-handed thrillers. Born in Vienna, he studied graphic art in the city before spending time in Brussels, Munich and Paris, selling cartoons, drawings and paintings to tourists and newspapers. He returned home at the outbreak of the First World War and, after army service, was offered a job by film producer Erich Pommer. He began as a writer for Pommer and producer-director Joe May before making a successful debut as director in 1919. His collaborations with his second wife, screenwriter Thea von Harbou, resulted in the most spectacular of German silent movies. He became a German citizen in 1922, but with the breakup of his marriage, the rise of the Nazis and the banning in Germany of his Das Testament des Dr Mabuse in 1932, he left for France and, ultimately, Hollywood to become an American citizen in 1939. Used to complete autonomy in Germany, he found it difficult to adapt to working under Hollywood conditions, where producers held the power. His first, and best, American film Fury failed at the box-office because it was not supported by MGM's executives, who he had alienated. His subsequent career had more downs than ups. His lovers included actresses Gerda Maurus, Miriam Hopkins, Marlene Dietrich, Kay Francis and Virginia Gilmore.

Lang, June (1915–2005) (June Vlasek)
American leading actress, who hovered on the brink of stardom in the 30s. Born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, she began as a singer and dancer in semi-professional performances and in vaudeville. She was on screen from the age of 16, at first as June Vlasek. Her career stalled in the late 30s, mainly due to the second of her three marriages, to gangster Johnny Roselli, who was the representative in Los Angeles of the Chicago La Cosa Nostra family. (In 1976 his decomposing body was found in a steel drum, floating off the coast of Florida.) After a career that included productions for Twentieth Century Fox, MGM and Universal, she found parts only in a few Poverty Row pictures in the 40s, and was forced to retire in 1946.

Lardner Jnr, Ring (1915–2000) (Ringgold Wilmer Lardner Jnr)
American screenwriter and novelist, the son of writer and humorist Ring Lardner. He was one of the 'Hollywood Ten' jailed for refusing to disclose political affiliations to the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1947. He had been named to HUAC as a Communist by fellow writer Budd Schulberg, the man who had persuaded him to join the Communist Party in the 30s. Asked by HUAC if he had been a member of the party, Lardner replied, 'I could answer the way you want, but I'd hate myself in the morning.' Born in Chicago, he began as a journalist, later becoming a publicist for David Selznick. Following his appearance before HUAC, he was sacked by Fox and blacklisted. An alcoholic like his father, he worked uncredited or in Europe until the mid-60s, including writing for the British TV series The Adventures of Robin Hood, The Adventures of Sir Lancelot, and The Buccaneers. He won his second Oscar for his screenplay for M*A*S*H, though he turned down an offer to write the pilot and become head writer for the TV series because he thought it would not succeed.

Launder, Frank (1907–1997)
English director and scriptwriter, often in a memorable partnership with Sidney GILLIAT. Born in Hitchin, Hertfordshire, he began as a title writer at Elstree in the late 20s, later working at Gaumont British and Gainsborough Pictures. He began his collaboration with Gilliat in the mid-30s: they first worked as writers, then, from the mid-40s with their own production company, as producers and directors; the pair were, in the late 50s, also directors of British Lion. Their comedies included the St Trinian's series, based on the books by Ronald Searle. His second wife was actress Bernadette O'FARRELL.

Laurel, Stan (1890–1965) (Arthur Stanley Jefferson)
British-born comedian, the thin half and gag deviser of the Laurel and Hardy team. Went to USA with Fred Karno's troupe, was in short comedies from 1915, teamed with Hardy 1926. He had director credit on some of their films and virtually directed many others. Special Academy Award 1960 'for his creative pioneering in the field of cinema comedy'.

For list of films see Oliver Hardy.

❂ For his genius in the invention of comic gags, and for finding his perfect niche in partnership with Oliver Hardy. Way Out West.

“ They were visual comedians, of course. But they successfully transferred to sound by the use of minimum sound, mainly in the form of carefully scattered catch phrases which arose naturally out of their characters as every child's foolish uncles. When disaster struck, as it inevitably did, who could resist the sight of Olly among the debris, gazing reprovingly at the unharmed Stan and saying: 'Here's another nice mess you've gotten me into.'

Or: 'Why don't you do something to HELP me?'

Or simply: 'I have NOTHING to say.'

Such results are Olly's reward for listening to Stan's suggestions earlier on. Stan's meaning is always unclear to begin with, so that Olly has to say: 'Tell me that again.'

But he finally gets the drift and agrees: 'That's a good idea.'

Olly of course was always shy, especially with women. When introduced, he was apt to twiddle his tie and observe: 'A lot of weather we've been having lately.'

His great asset was his courtly manner, preserved even when mistaking an open can of milk for the telephone receiver: 'Pardon me for a moment, my ear is full of milk.'

Stan, having no catch phrases, relied on lively non sequiturs. When asked: 'You never met my wife, did you?'

He would reply: 'Yes, I never did.'

His speciality was putting his foot in it, as when he visits Olly in hospital and announces: 'I brought you some hard-boiled eggs and some nuts.'

Not surprisingly, he eats them himself, having thoughtfully brought salt and pepper canisters in his pocket. Then there was the time in a bar when they could afford only one beer, ordered by Olly with his usual majesty. Stan did rather ruin the effect by calling after the waiter: 'And two clean straws that haven't been used …'

But he was capable of saying the right thing, as when Olly prepared a mundane repast of coffee and beans. Stan liked it: 'Boy, you sure know how to plan a meal!'

Behind the scenes, Stan was the producer. Olly was ready to admit: 'I have never really worked hard in the creation department.'

But he astutely saw the secret of their success: 'Those two fellows we created, they were nice, very nice people. They never get anywhere because they are both so dumb, but they don't know they're dumb. One of the reasons why people like us, I guess, is because they feel superior to us.'

That was put another way in the opening title to one of their silent films: 'Neither Mr Laurel nor Mr Hardy had any thoughts of getting married. In fact, they had no thoughts of any kind …'

And the opening of Come Clean summed up their best comedy style very neatly: 'Mr Hardy holds that a man should always tell his wife the whole truth. Mr Laurel is crazy too.'

Mr Laurel had his own philosophy: 'We were doing a very simple thing, giving some people some laughs, and that's all we were trying to do.'

Lee, Christopher (1922–)
Gaunt, tall English actor whose personality lends itself best to sinister or horrific parts. Seems to have made more films than any other living actor, and has certainly played most of the known monsters. Born in London, the son of an army officer and the Contessa Carandini, he began work as a clerk and, after service in the Second World War, was one of many would-be actors signed to a seven-year contract to train in Rank's Charm School. He played small roles until cast as Dracula in one of the early Hammer horrors.

Lehrman, Henry 'Pathé' (1883–1946)
Austrian-born director and actor of silents in Hollywood who made Charlie Chaplin's earliest films for Keystone; later a screenwriter. His nickname was given to him by D. W. Griffith and derived from the fact that he claimed to have worked for the Pathé company in France. Born in Vienna, he emigrated in his late teens, working first as a tram conductor, and began in films as an extra and bit-part player before joining Keystone as a director and actor. Chaplin disliked working with him, complaining that he ruined his best jokes. He later founded his own company, L-KO (for Lehrman-Knock Out), using a former Fred Karno performer, Scotsman Billy Ritchie (1874–1921), as a comic in the Chaplin style, and then turned out comedies for Fox. After the arrival of sound, he had a brief career as a screenwriter, but was bankrupt by the early 40s. He was the lover of Virginia Rappe, the starlet for whose death Fatty Arbuckle was blamed, and was the chief prosecution witness at the subsequent trial that ended Arbuckle's career.

❝ In my books characters are more important than the plot, but Hollywood movies are based on plot. So when they make movies about the books they become much too theatrical. And Hollywood wants heroes who are major stars. My hero isn't a major star, he's just a guy. The films lose the feeling of the books completely. – E.L.

Donald Westlake wrote me a letter and asked: 'Why do you keep hoping to see a good movie made? The books are ours, everything else is virgins thrown in the volcano. Be happy if the check is good.' – E.L.

Lloyd, Harold (1893–1971)
American silent comedian, famous for his timid bespectacled 'nice boy' character and for thrill-comedy situations involving dangerous stunts. In hundreds of two-reelers from 1916. He began as a stage actor before finding work first as a film extra and then as a Chaplin imitator in his Lucky Luke series of two-reelers. He first presented what was to become his world-famous quiet, bespectacled persona in Over the Fence in 1917. His career was interrupted in 1919 when a prop bomb turned out to be real and exploded in his face, removing a finger and thumb from his right hand. He recovered, signed a new contract with Hal Roach and by the beginning of the 20s was making big money: Bumping into Broadway, which cost $17,000 to make, took more than $150,000 in three years, bringing him a personal profit of more than $30,000. By 1922 his popularity rivalled Chaplin's. Grandma's Boy, his first feature, grossed nearly a million dollars and Safety Last more than $1.5m. He left Roach to run his own company in 1923. His career dwindled with the coming of sound and he spent time on his hobbies, which included stereoscopic photography. He married Mildred Davis, who starred with him in several of his films. A collection of his 3-D photographs, Harold Lloyd's Hollywood, was published in 1992. He was given a special Academy Award in 1952 as 'master comedian and good citizen'.

“ Comedy comes from inside. It comes from your face. It comes from your body. – H.L.

I do not believe the public will want spoken comedy. Motion pictures and the spoken arts are two distinct arts. – H.L.

Basically he had not a funny bone in his body, but he was such a good actor that if you gave him a good script, he could play it to the best advantages for laughs. – Hal Roach

Lloyd was outstanding even among the master craftsmen at setting up a gag clearly, culminating and getting out of it deftly, and linking it smoothly to the next. – James Agee

We wanted to make plays or films that got the same responses as when you saw the news. We wanted to be seen as almost a part of the news, as reports from the front line. – K.L. on his TV work

There are two sorts of acting: theatre acting and film acting, which can be something different; where somebody can be taken through a story and experience the story and put themselves in that position, and respond as they would respond, so that you're really experiencing that person in that story. – K.L.

He's totally round the bend. You don't rehearse. Everything is a take. – Ricky Tomlinson

He reminds you always that you shouldn't become a film maker unless you have something to say. – Alan Parker

Lubitsch, Ernst (1892–1947)
German director, once a comic actor, in a series of silent farces starring him as 'Meyer'. After a variety of subjects he settled for a kind of sophisticated sex comedy that became unmistakably his: the 'Lubitsch touch' was a form of visual innuendo, spicy without ever being vulgar. His greatest period came after 1922, when he settled in Hollywood and became Paramount's leading producer. Early films include many shorts. Awarded special Oscar 1946 'for his distinguished contributions to the art of the motion picture'. Married actress Helene (Leni) Sonnet and his lovers included actresses Ona MUNSON and Natalie SCHAFER.

“ It's the Lubitsch touch that means so much – piped the posters. 'He was the only director in Hollywood who had his own signature', said S. N. Behrman. These were two ways of saying that Lubitsch was a master of cinematic innuendo. 'I let the audience use their imaginations. Can I help it if they misconstrue my suggestions?', he asked archly. In fact he delighted in naughtiness, and carried it off with great delicacy, though he admitted his lapses: 'I sometimes make pictures which are not up to my standard, but then it can only be said of a mediocrity that all his work is up to his standard.'

And he gave in finally to the American way: 'I've been to Paris France and I've been to Paris Paramount. Paris Paramount is better.'

Some people, Mary Pickford for instance, failed to perceive his talents: 'I parted company with him as soon as I could. I thought him a very uninspired director. He was a director of doors.'

According to Andrew Sarris (1968): 'He was the last of the genuine Continentals let loose on the American continent, and we shall never see his like again because the world he celebrated had died – even before he did – everywhere except in his own memory.'

Lucan, Arthur (1887–1954) (Arthur Towle)

MacLean, Alistair (1922–1987)
Best-selling Scottish adventure writer, and occasional screenwriter. Born in Shettleston, Glasgow, and educated at the University of Glasgow, he began his writing career when, as a schoolmaster, he won a short story competition. His second book, The Guns of Navarone, became an international success as a novel and a film; much of his work was acquired for filming or, in some instances, written as scripts and turned into novels later. In the 60s, he also became an unsuccessful hotelier, buying, among other properties, the Jamaica Inn made famous by Daphne Du Maurier. He set up his own production company, Trio Productions, which also involved director Geoffrey Reeve, but it never produced a film. Screen rights were sold to HMS Ulysses, his first novel, South by Java Head and The Golden Gate, but no films have resulted so far. A proposed TV series, about a top-secret force operating under the UN Security Council, got no further than a pilot, The Hostage Tower. But the outlines for the series were turned into novels by other writers after his death, as was Golden Girl, from a screenplay he wrote. Alcoholism hampered his later career. Married twice.

MacLiammoir, Michael (1899–1978) (Alfred Willmore)
English actor of the old school, playwright, artist and stage designer who transformed himself into a significant figure in Irish theatre. Born in Willesden, London, he was on stage as a successful boy actor from 1911, appearing in several silent films, including the Irish-made Land of Her Fathers 24, which is now lost. From 1918, he re-invented himself as Irish, learning to speak the language, changing his name and claiming to have been born in Cork. In partnership with Hilton Edwards, he founded the influential Gate Theatre in Dublin in 1928. His film roles were few, but one, as Iago in Orson Welles's Othello, resulted in a book of witty reminiscences, Put Money in Thy Purse (1952). In later life, he received international acclaim for his one-man show about Oscar Wilde, The Importance of Being Oscar, which was also televised.

Autobiography: 1946, All For Hecuba: An Irish Theatrical Autobiography. 1961, Each Actor on His Ass. 1968, An Oscar of No Importance. 1977, Enter a Goldfish: Memoirs of an Irish Actor Young and Old.

I can honestly say he's the most difficult actor I ever worked with. – Norman Jewison

One thing about Steve, he didn't like the women in his life to have balls. – Ali MacGraw

You've got to realize that a Steve McQueen performance lends itself to monotony. – Robert Mitchum

When you made a deal with him, his attitude was that what you were really doing was renting his nude, filthy, unshaven body for however long the filming was going to last... If you wanted him clothed, you had to buy him clothes. So you would get these bills–40 pairs of Levis, 300 sweaters, underwear, socks, shoes, the whole works. – John Calley

❝ In movies you're a product. And if I'm a product, I'm a Tabasco sauce. I'm not a sort of shepherd's pie, and that's the way it is. – J.M.

The movie business flattens everything in its wake like an ancient dead tree falling from an immense height into a particularly soft spot of moist, dumb green grass. It must be said, of course, that the public plays no small part in the movie business, greedily consuming the worst that movies have to offer. – J.M.

If Eisenstein would have lived longer and spent more time in Hollywood, he might have talked less about the Theory of Montage, and more about healthy eating, and what to have on the Craft Service Table. – D.M.

Working as a screenwriter-for-hire, one is in the employ not of the eventual consumers (the audience, whose interests the honest writer must have at heart), but of speculators, whose ambition, many times, is not to please the eventual consumer, but to extort from him as much money as possible as quickly as possible. – D.M.

The movies are a momentary and beautiful aberration of a technological society in the last stages of decay. – D.M.

I have always thought that in the motion picture business the real violence was not what people do on screen, but what we do to raise the money. – D.M.

Mankiewicz, Herman (1897–1953)
American screenwriter, playwright and wit. Born in New York, the son of a Columbia University professor, he studied at Columbia University and the University of Berlin and began as a journalist, including a period as drama critic of the New Yorker. Self-destructive, and a compulsive gambler, he often wasted his considerable talents, eventually moving from one studio to another as he lost jobs through non-attendance or indiscretions. An alcoholic, he once threw up at a dinner given by producer Arthur Hornblow, Jnr, and remarked, 'It's all right. The white wine came up with the fish.' He lost his job at Columbia after the studio head, Harry Cohn, explained that he could tell if a film was good or bad according to whether his fanny squirmed or not. 'Imagine,' said Mankiewicz, 'the whole world wired to Harry Cohn's ass!' He died of uremic poisoning. He was the brother of Joseph L. Mankiewicz; his son, Don Mankiewicz, was a novelist and screenwriter.

❝ Will you accept 300 per week to work for Paramount Pictures? All expenses paid. 300 is peanuts. Millions are to be grabbed out here and your only competition is idiots. Don't let this get around. – H.M.'s wire to Ben Hecht, 1926

Tell me, do you know any 75-dollar-a-week writers? – Anon

I know lots of them, but they're all making 1500 dollars a week. – H.M.

In a novel the hero can lay ten girls and marry a virgin for the finish. In a movie this is not allowed. The villain can lay anybody he wants, have as much fun as he wants cheating and stealing, getting rich and whipping the servants. But you have to shoot him in the end. When he falls with a bullet in the forehead, it is advisable that he clutch at the Gobelin tapestry on the wall and bring it down over his head like a symbolic shroud. Also, covered by such a tapestry, the actor does not have to hold his breath while being photographed as a dead man. – H.M.

Barbara Stanwyck is my favorite. My God, I could just sit and dream of being married to her, having a little cottage out in the hills, vines around the door. I'd come home from the office tired and weary, and I'd be met by Barbara, walking through the door holding an apple pie she had cooked herself. And wearing no drawers. – H.M.

I don't know how it is that you start working at something you don't like, and before you know it you're an old man. – H.M.

A greater phenomenon than Herman's wit was the fact that his victims employed him, at large sums, to write movies he despised for bosses he ridiculed. – Ben Hecht

Famous line (Citizen Kane) 'If I hadn't been so rich, I might have been a really great man.'

❝ I got a job at Metro and went in to see Louis Mayer, who told me he wanted me to be a producer. I said I wanted to write and direct. He said, 'No, you have to produce first, you have to crawl before you can walk.' Which is as good a definition of producing as I ever heard. – J.L.M.

I felt the urge to direct because I couldn't stomach what was being done with what I wrote. – J.L.M

Every screenwriter worthy of the name has already directed his film when he has written his script. – J.L.M

There were always financial crises. Someone would come out from the East and announce that the business was in deep trouble, and what would happen was that they'd reduce the number of matzo balls in Louie Mayer's chicken soup from three to two. Then they'd fire a couple of secretaries and feel virtuous. – J.L.M.

The toughest three pictures I ever made. It was shot in a state of emergency, shot in confusion, and wound up in blind panic. – J.L.M. on Cleopatra

Manners, J. Hartley (1870–1928)
English-born actor and dramatist in America who enjoyed his greatest success with his play Peg o' My Heart, which starred his wife Laurette Taylor, as did all his subsequent works. This sentimental drama opened in 1912 and ran for 603 performances on Broadway, then the longest run of a non-musical play, and for 710 performances in London from 1914. It has been filmed twice: as a silent in 1922, directed by King Vidor and starring Laurette Taylor, and in 1931, directed by Robert Z. Leonard and starring Marion Davies. Born in London, of somewhat mysterious origins, he began as an actor in the late 1890s, and moved to the US in the early 1900s. Died of cancer.

❝ Critics have knocked me for targeting society's lowest common denominator. I believe that television was, and still is, the only medium that can truly reach society's lowest common denominator and entertain those people who maybe can't afford a movie or a play. So why not reach them and do it well? – G.M.

The Marx Brothers

A family of Jewish-American comics whose zany humour convulsed minority audiences in its time and influenced later comedy writing to an enormous extent. Chico (1886–1961) (Leonard Marx) played the piano eccentrically and spoke with an impossible Italian accent; Harpo (1888–1964) (Adolph Marx) was a child-like mute who also played the harp; Groucho (1890–1977) (Julius Marx) had a painted moustache, a cigar, a loping walk and the lion's share of the wisecracks. In vaudeville from childhood, they came to films after Broadway success. Originally there were two other brothers: Gummo (1893–1977) (Milton Marx), who left the act early on, and Zeppo (1901–79) (Herbert Marx), who didn't fit in with the craziness and left them after playing romantic relief in their first five films. These first five films contain much of their best work: later their concentrated anarchy was dissipated by musical and romantic relief.

Autobiography: 1961, Harpo Speaks! Among Groucho's semi-autobiographical works are Groucho and Me (1959), Memoirs of a Mangy Lover (1964) and The Groucho Letters (1967).

Biography: 1952, Life with Groucho by Arthur Marx; 1972, Son of Groucho by Arthur Marx. 1978; Hello, I Must Be Going (a rather depressing account of Groucho's last years) by Charlotte Chandler; 1999, Monkey Business: The Lives and Legends of the Marx Brothers by Simon Louvish. 2000, Groucho: The Life and Times of Julius Henry Marx by Stefan Kanfer.

Other books: 1974, The Marx Brothers Scrapbook by Richard Anobile and Groucho. The films are examined in detail in The Marx Brothers at the Movies by Paul D. Zimmerman and Burt Goldblatt.

✪ For shattering all our illusions, and making us love it. Duck Soup.

“ The leader wore a large painted moustache and affected a cigar, and his three henchmen impersonated respectively a mute harpist afflicted with satyriasis, a larcenous Italian, and a jaunty cox-comb, who carried the love interest. – S. J. Perelman

Lines written by or for the Marx Brothers would fill a book in themselves. This is a selection of personal favourites, arranged chronologically and attributed to the authors of the films concerned.

1929: The Cocoanuts (George S. Kaufman, Morrie Ryskind) 'Ah, Mrs Rittenhouse, won't you … lie down?

I'll wrestle anybody in the crowd for five dollars.

Be free, my friends. One for all and all for me – me for you and three for five and six for a quarter.

Do you know that this is the biggest development since Sophie Tucker?

Your eyes shine like the pants of my blue serge suit.'

1930: Animal Crackers (George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind) 'You're the most beautiful woman I've ever seen, which doesn't say much for you.

What do you get an hour?

– For playing, we get ten dollars an hour.

What do you get for not playing?

– Twelve dollars an hour. Now for rehearsing, we make a special rate – fifteen dollars an hour.

And what do you get for not rehearsing?

– You couldn't afford it. You see, if we don't rehearse, we don't play. And if we don't play, that runs into money.

How much would you want to run into an open manhole?

– Just the cover charge.

Well, drop in some time.

– Sewer.

Well, I guess we cleaned that up.

You go Uruguay and I'll go mine.

One morning I shot an elephant in my pajamas. How he got into my pajamas I'll never know.'

1931: Monkey Business (S. J. Perelman, Will B. Johnstone, Arthur Sheekman) 'Do you want your nails trimmed long?

– Oh, about an hour and a half. I got nothing to do.

Look at me: I worked my way up from nothing to a state of extreme poverty.

I want to register a complaint. Do you know who sneaked into my room at three o'clock this morning?

– Who?

– Nobody, and that's my complaint.

Do you suppose I could buy back my introduction to you?

Sir, you have the advantage of me.

– Not yet I haven't, but wait till I get you outside.'

1932: Horse Feathers (Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby, S. J. Perelman, Will B. Johnstone) 'Why don't you bore a hole in yourself and let the sap run out?

There's a man outside with a big black moustache.

– Tell him I've got one.

The dean is furious. He's waxing wroth.

– Is Roth out there too? Tell Roth to wax the dean for a while.

You're a disgrace to our family name of Wagstaff, if such a thing is possible.

You've got the brain of a four-year-old boy, and I bet he was glad to get rid of it.

What a day! Spring in the air!

– Who, me? I should spring in the air and fall in the lake?'

1933: Duck Soup (Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby, Arthur Sheekman, Nat Perrin) 'Take a card. You can keep it: I've got fifty-one left.

My husband is dead.

– I'll bet he's just using that as an excuse.

I was with him to the end.

– No wonder he passed away.

I held him in my arms and kissed him.

– So it was murder!

This is a gala day for you.

– That's plenty. I don't think I could manage more than one gal a day.

What is it that has four pairs of pants, lives in Philadelphia, and it never rains but it pours?

I could dance with you till the cows come home. On second thoughts I'll dance with the cows and you come home.

Excuse me while I brush the crumbs out of my bed. I'm expecting company.'

1935: A Night at the Opera (George S. Kaufman, Morrie Ryskind, Al Boasberg) 'Do they allow tipping on the boat?

– Yes, sir.

Have you got two fives?

– Oh, yes, sir.

Then you won't need the ten cents I was going to give you.

Let joy be unconfined. Let there be dancing in the streets, drinking in the saloons, and necking in the park.'

– You look like you never met a healthy woman.

Don't point that beard at me, it might go off.

Closer … hold me closer …

– If I hold you any closer I'll be in back of you!

Marry me and I'll never look at another horse.

Isn't that awfully large for a pill?

– Well, it was too small for a basketball and I didn't know what to do with it.

One dollar and you remember me all your life.

– That's the most nauseating proposition I've ever had.'

– That's a drink!

I bet your father spent the first year of your life throwing rocks at the stork.'

1945: A Night in Casablanca (Joseph Fields, Roland Kibbee, Frank Tashlin) 'The first thing we're going to do is change all the numbers on all the doors.

– But sir, think of the confusion …

Yeah, but think of the fun.

Hey boss, you got a woman in there?

– If I haven't, I've been wasting thirty minutes of valuable time.

I'm Beatrice Ryner. I stop at the hotel.

– I'm Ronald Kornblow. I stop at nothing.'

Groucho himself later proved to be sometimes as funny as his scripts. He wrote to resign from a club: 'I don't care to belong to any social organization which would accept me as a member.'

And he wrote a threatening letter to Confidential magazine: 'Dear Sir: If you continue to publish slanderous pieces about me I shall feel compelled to cancel my subscription.'

His wit did not fail him with age: 'I've been around so long I can remember Doris Day before she was a virgin.'

His influence was international; an example of Paris graffiti in 1968 read: 'Je suis Marxiste, tendance Groucho.'

But life with the Marxes was seldom peaceful. Herman Mankiewicz said: 'I never knew what bicarbonate of soda was until I wrote a Marx Brothers picture.'

Groucho once removed Greta Garbo's hat and said: 'Excuse me, I thought you were a fellow I once knew in Pittsburgh.'

George F. Kaufman had soon had enough of them: 'Cocoanuts was a comedy; the Marx Brothers are comics; meeting them was a tragedy.'

Groucho was perhaps too fearless a critic, as when giving his opinion of Samson and Delilah, starring Victor Mature and Hedy Lamarr: 'First picture I've seen in which the male lead has bigger tits than the female.'

And on the nudist musical Hair: 'Why should I pay ten dollars for something I can see in the bathroom for nothing?'

Harpo could be bitchy too. His appraisal of Abie's Irish Rose has lingered down the decades: 'No worse than a bad cold.'

And he was witty when refusing Alexander Woollcott's invitation to share a holiday on the French riviera: 'I can think of forty better places to spend the summer, all of them on Long Island in a hammock.'

Groucho even aspired to be a political thinker: 'Military intelligence is a contradiction in terms …'

A final thought from Groucho: 'If you want to see a comic strip you should see me in a shower.'

Well, one more from Groucho for luck: 'They say a man is as old as the woman he feels.'

“ I only really exist when I am working on a film. – M.M.

I don't like that Method thing: what sufferance to go into a role! I'm not going to enter a monastery so I can play a priest. An actor is a buffoon – this is the miracle, being a chameleon. – M.M.

Life has been generous to me. I come from a very modest family – my father was a cabinet-maker – and I'm in a profession I like. – M.M.

Masumura, Yasuzo (1924–1986)
Japanese film director who was a precursor of his country's New Wave directors of the 60s and an injfluence on the films of Nagisa Oshima. Better known in Japan than elsewhere, his reputation in the West has grown from a cult following to more mainstream acceptance in the 21st century. Born in Kofu, Yamanashi, he studied law at the University of Tokyo before dropping out to work as an assistant director at the Daiei studio. He returned to university to take a degree in philosophy and, in 1950, studied at the Centro Sperimentale Cinematografico in Rome for two years, returning to Japan to make films on transgressive themes, involving the fate of individuals seeking freedom in a regimented society. He worked for Daiei for most of his career and, after that studio went bankrupt in the early 70s, ended his career making a erotic version of The Blue Lagoon in Italy.

He bumbled through the play like a charming retriever who has buried a bone and can't quite remember where. – Noël Coward

Although he was always terribly funny, he never looked as if he thought what he said or did was even remotely amusing. He had become such a master at manipulating an audience that he had developed a habit of getting a good laugh with a line one night, then the next night, deliberately killing it, and trying for a different laugh – Rex Harrison

He was hell to act with. He really could see no reason why anyone should get a laugh from an audience except himself. – Roland Culver

Matthews, Jessie (1907–1981)
Vivacious English singing and dancing star of light musicals in the 30s, on stage from 1917. Born in London, she first made her mark in the theatre in Charles B. Cochran's revues and the musical comedy Evergreen, which led to a contract with Gaumont-British to star in The Good Companions and, later, the screen version of Evergreen. For six years from the early 30s she quit the stage for films, becoming Britain's most popular musical star, under the careful direction of Victor Saville. She turned down Hollywood offers because she did not want to be separated from Sonnie Hale, the second of her three husbands. He starred with her in several films, but her popularity waned when he took over as director for three movies. Her youthful appeal was fading, and she was having weight problems. Hale co-wrote and was to direct Asking for Trouble, which he intended as a lavish screen musical, but Gaumont-British were unable to raise the finance, and shooting was abandoned. Carol Reed was brought in to direct a version with the musical numbers cut, retitled Climbing High; it also failed, though she and Reed briefly became lovers. She returned to the stage and variety performances before becoming a radio personality as Mrs Dale in the BBC soap opera The Dales 63–69.

British popular novelist, nephew of Somerset Maugham. The Servant and The Intruder have been filmed.

Maugham, W. Somerset (1874–1965)
Distinguished English novelist, astringent short-story writer and playwright whose works have often been filmed. Born in Paris, he was educated at Heidelberg University and studied medicine at St Thomas's Hospital in London. He became the most successful dramatist of the early 1900s, the first to have four plays running simultaneously in London, and continued to produce hits until the early 30s, when he stopped writing plays; his breakthrough as a novelist came in 1915, with his autobiographical novel Of Human Bondage, which has so far been filmed three times. He settled in the South of France after his long-time American companion Gerald Haxton was declared an undesirable alien in Britain after being charged with gross indecency. His novel Ashenden, filmed by Alfred Hitchcock and based on his experience as a spy in Russia during the First World War, led to the continuing popularity of spy fiction and paved the way for James Bond. He was made a Companion of Honour in 1954. A film of his rather turbulent and unhappy life is constantly promised.

Mayer, Louis B. (1885–1957)
American executive, former production head of MGM. Once a scrap merchant, he became a cinema manager and later switched to distribution. With Sam Goldwyn, formed Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in 1924, and when Goldwyn bought himself out became one of Hollywood's most flamboyant and powerful tycoons until the 50s when he found himself less in touch and responsible to a board. Special Academy Award 1950 'for distinguished service to the motion picture industry'.

Biography: 1954, Hollywood Rajah by Bosley Crowther. 1975, Mayer and Thalberg by Sam Marx. 1993, The Merchant of Dreams: Louis B. Mayer, MGM and the Secret Hollywood by Charles Higham.

❝ This 'Hollywood rajah' was perhaps the archetypal movie mogul: sentimental, commonsensical, businesslike, unaesthetic, arrogant, illogical, naive, amoral, tasteless and physically unappealing. For twenty years he ran MGM splendidly in his own image, and became a legend of autocracy. He did not stint on his surroundings; Sam Goldwyn said of his office: 'You need an automobile to reach the desk.'

No detail escaped him. B. P. Schulberg gave him the title: 'Czar of all the rushes.'

Though he kept it well hidden, he did have a basic sense of humility: 'You know how I'm smart? I got people around me who know more than I do.'

His arguments were often irritatingly unanswerable. Arthur Freed recalls: 'If a writer complained of his work being changed, Mayer always said:

'The number one book of the ages was written by a committee, and it was called The Bible."

To Gottfried Reinhardt, who wanted to make a non-commercial picture, Mayer snapped: 'You want to be an artist, but you want other people to starve for your art.'

Mayer's idea of a good commercial movie was simple, homespun, warm, happy … in a phrase, the Hardy Family. That series, cheap to make, kept the studio in profit for many a year. Their success did not delude Mayer into thinking they were great movies: 'Don't make these pictures any better. Just keep them the way they are.'

This did not mean that he despised the American public, only that he knew what they liked. He even created and acted out for the producer a prayer that the son of the fictional family might speak when his mother was ill: 'Dear God, don't let my mom die, because she's the best mom in the world.'

He was similarly quick to correct a plot point: 'A boy may hate his father, but he will always respect him.'

As early as 1922 his credo in this vein was fully formed: 'I will only make pictures that I won't be ashamed to have my children see.'

His cry in later years, when permissiveness was creeping in, was: 'Don't show the natural functions!'

In argument Mayer was a great and exhausting opponent, violent, wheedling and pleading by turns. Robert Taylor remembered going in for more money. When he emerged, a friend asked him: 'Did you get the rise?

– No, but I gained a father.'

Taylor later remembered Mayer in a respectful light: 'He was kind, understanding, fatherly and protective, always there when I had problems.'

As Mayer himself said: 'Life without service isn't worth living.'

But he saw the dangers of life at the top: 'Look out for yourself or they'll pee on your grave.'

Herman J. Mankiewicz saw Mayer himself as a danger: 'He had the memory of an elephant and the hide of an elephant. The only difference is that elephants are vegetarians and Mayer's diet was his fellow man.'

Mayer was very proud of MGM's army of stars and technicians: 'We are the only kind of company whose assets all walk out of the gate at night.'

He needed their goodwill: 'I want to rule by love, not fear.'

But when he died, the usual caustic comments were heard: 'The only reason so many people attended his funeral was they wanted to make sure he was dead.'

He had then been for some years at odds with the MGM hierarchy, an unwilling exile from the boardroom. Said someone at the funeral: 'I see MGM got L.B. back at last.

– Yeah, but on its own terms.'

For some years people had been heard to remark: 'The old grey Mayer he ain't what he used to be.'

But Bob Hope, as so often, made the aptest wisecrack: 'Louis B. Mayer came out west with twenty-eight dollars, a box camera and an old lion. He built a monument to himself – the Bank of America.'

❝ Of the three-hundred-plus movies I've been associated with, I would say there are probably around one hundred or so really good ones ... There are another hundred or so I'd watch myself on a rainy Sunday afternoon. And then there are about a hundred for which my colleagues and I should be shot for thinking it was a good idea. In Hollywood terms, that's a pretty good record. – M.M.

Miller, Ann (1921–2004) (Lucy Ann Collier)

Long-legged American dancer, in films from mid-30s. Born in Chireno, Texas, she was a professional dancer from childhood, though it took her a long time to become a success. After spending a decade in a series of mediocre musicals and movies for Republic, Columbia and RKO, she was given her chance when she signed for MGM and dazzled with her elaborate tap routines in a series of big budget musicals. When that era ended in the mid 50s, she returned to performing on stage, taking over from Angela Lansbury in the Broadway musical Mame and starring with Mickey Rooney in the long-running vaudeville-inspired musical Sugar Babes. She was romantically linked with movie moguls Harry Cohn and Louis B. Mayer. The first of her three husbands was actor Bill Moss.

❝ I have worked like a dog all my life, honey. Dancing, as Fred Astaire said, is next to ditch-digging. You sweat and you slave and the audience doesn't think you have a brain in your head. – A.M. in 1979 interview

Miller, Arthur (1915–2005)

American playwright whose work has been adapted for the cinema. Born in Harlem, New York, and brought up in Brooklyn, he began writing plays while studying at the University of Michigan. His first Broadway success All My Sons in 1947 established him as one of America's leading 20th century playwrights and was filmed a year later. Many of his subsequent plays were adapted for television and film, notably Death of a Salesman, which was emasculated in Stanley Kramer's 1961 film, and The Crucible. He planned a film on New York's warring youth gangs in the mid 50s, but it was stymied by the House Un-American Activities Committe; as a result of his refusal to cooperate with the committe, he was tried for contempt and given a suspended sentence of a month's imprisonment, which was later reversed on appeal. His major screenplay was The Misfits, which he wrote as a gift for Marilyn Monroe, who was the second (1956-61) of his three wives, but the production was a troubled one, mainly due to what he called her 'unrelenting uncertainty as an actress' in her role. He also wrote two plays that concerned their relationship, After the Fall, 62, and Finishing the Picture, 04. Neither has been filmed, though After the Fall was done as a TV play with Faye Dunaway in the role of the Monroe-like Maggie.

❝ It can take a long time to accept that celebrity is a kind of loneliness. – A.M.

A very large percentage of mankind seems to live in imaginary proximity to famous people, with whom they carry on complex relationships, illusory conversations, scenes of conflict, and love affairs that even include heart-breaking partings and joyous reconciliations. – A.M.

Great actor-personalities, I have come to think, are like trained bears in that they attract us with their discipline while their powerful claws threaten us; a great star implies he is his own person and can be mean and even dangerous, like a great leader. – A.M.

Milligan, Spike (1918–2002)
Irish comedian and arch-goon of stage, TV and radio. Born in Ahmadnagar, India, where his father was an army sergeant, he moved to London at the age of 15. He began as a clerk before finding work as a singer and musician with dance bands. After serving in the Second World War (memorialized in seven volumes of autobiography), he worked in musichall as a guitarist before writing and performing in the influential BBC radio comedy The Goon Show with Peter Sellers, Harry Secombe and Michael Bentine. His quirky, improvisationary approach to comedy, although successful on television, never translated well to film. MGM signed him to a seven-year contract in 1960 as an actor and writer but the resulting films Invasion Quartet and Postman's Knock, neither of which he wrote, were failures. A later attempt to turn his stage success The Bed Sitting Room into a movie was not much more successful. He was awarded an honorary knighthood in the New Year's Honours of 2001. Married three times.

Mistinguett (1875–1956) (Jeanne Florentine Bourgeois)
Enduring French music-hall performer, the idol of Paris for most of her long career. As the star of the Folies Bergère in 1911, she chose the young Maurice Chevalier to be her partner. She began her career at the age of 15, first gaining attention for her dance des apaches, and continued to perform, and to display her elaborate plumed and bespangled costumes and her legs, which were insured for 500,000 francs, until her mid-70s. She became a star of silent movies, but made few in the era of talkies. Her lovers included, apart from Chevalier, King Alfonso XIII of Spain and, probably, Edward VII when he was the Prince of Wales.

“I do not like films very much. I do not know how to act for the camera, for a machine that will not let itself be won. It is no longer a matter of capturing an audience but of being captured oneself, by a lens. – M.

The veterans of the theatre would only condescend to film for very substantial salaries and could not see that the cinema was something other than photographed theatre. Film technique was as yet rudimentary and they were pained and indignant to find themselves disfigured on screen. When Sarah Bernhardt saw herself in The Lady of the Camelias she fainted. – M.

✪ For triumphing by sheer force of personality over scores of inferior films; and for enhancing a few good ones. Farewell My Lovely.

“ Robert Mitchum and his sleepy eyes have hypnotized audiences for over thirty years, through bad pictures, bad notices and narcotics cases. Just now and then he has been allowed to prove himself an excellent actor; and he has always been a commanding personality, though his attitude to himself and his career is presumably exemplified by the title of his biography – It Sure Beats Working. He claims: 'I've survived because I work cheap and don't take up too much time.'

And he adds: 'Movies bore me, especially my own.'

He is not even proud of his physique: 'People think I have an interesting walk. Hell, I'm just trying to hold my gut in.'

Or his fans: 'You know what the average Robert Mitchum fan is? He's full of warts and dandruff and he's probably got a hernia too, but he sees me up there on the screen and he thinks if that bum can make it, I can be president.'

He disclaims ambition: 'I started out to be a sex fiend but I couldn't pass the physical.'

He hated his early films: 'I kept the same suit for six years – and the same dialogue. We just changed the title of the picture and the leading lady.'

Then he had a stroke of luck: 'I came back from the war and ugly heroes were in.'

Even so he thinks films are a joke: 'I gave up being serious about making pictures around the time I made a film with Greer Garson and she took a hundred and twenty-five takes to say no.'

He is unashamed of his lapses: 'The only difference between me and my fellow actors is that I've spent more time in jail.'

He does have an ambition, to spend every cent he's got: 'When I drop dead and they rush to the drawer, there's going to be nothing in it but a note saying "Later".'

And when asked why in his mid-60s he took on the arduous task of starring in an 18-hour mini-series, The Winds of War, he answered: 'It promised a year of free lunches.'

He is loved by the press, for he doesn't care what they write about him: 'They're all true – booze, brawls, broads, all true. Make up some more if you want to.'

And he remains self-deprecating to the last: 'Young actors love me. They think if that big slob can make it, there's a chance for us.'

And his final word of advice to the health-conscious: 'How do I keep fit? I lay down a lot.'

Mix, Tom (1880–1940)
A US Marshal (by his own unconfirmed account) who turned actor and starred in over 400 low-budget westerns. In the 30s he also toured with his own circus. He died in a car crash in Arizona, where a monument was erected to the memory of the man 'whose spirit left his body on this spot and whose characterizations and portrayals in life served to better fix memories of the Old West in the minds of living men.'

Mix was noted for wearing his white suit and boots even to fashionable parties.

Monroe, Marilyn (1926–1962) (Norma Jean Baker or Mortenson)

American leading lady, a former model whose classic rags-to-riches story was built on a super-sexy image which quickly tarnished, leaving her a frustrated, neurotic and tragic victim of the Hollywood which created her. The pity was that she had real talent as well as sex appeal.

Marilyn, a compilation feature, was released after her death. In 1976 Misty Rowe played her in Goodbye Norma Jean. She was played by Melody Anderson in the TV movie Marilyn and Bobby: Her Final Affair 93.

❝ A sex symbol becomes a thing. I hate being a thing. –

The tragedy of Marilyn Monroe was such that she has inspired more books of reminiscence and analysis than any other star. Her problem was, oddly enough, best expressed in an earlier decade by Clara Bow: 'Being a sex symbol is a heavy load to carry, especially when one is tired, hurt and bewildered.'

Monroe knew her own limitations: 'To put it bluntly, I seem to be a whole superstructure with no foundation. But I'm working on the foundation.'

What she meant by that was: 'The best way for me to prove myself as a person is to prove myself as an actress.'

She was uncertain whether she would ever achieve this aim. She said once: 'I enjoy acting when you really hit it right.'

But she seldom felt she did. In her search for meaning she married playwright Arthur Miller, and the headline was: 'EGGHEAD WEDS HOURGLASS'

It finally failed to work although he was kind to her with press comments such as: 'Her beauty shines because the spirit is forever showing itself.'

Not that she was lacking in moral supporters; even unlikely people such as Edith Sitwell acclaimed her: 'She knows the world, but this knowledge has not lowered her great and benevolent dignity; its darkness has not dimmed her goodness.'

She settled for a flip image as expressed in her lively encounters with the press: 'Didn't you have anything on?

– I had the radio on.

Sex is part of nature, and I go along with nature.

Do you wear falsies?

– Those who know me better, know better.'

The contradictions within herself finally killed her, and the obituaries were many and varied:

Quote:You don't have to hold an inquest to find out who killed Marilyn Monroe. Those bastards in the big executive chairs killed her. – Henry Hathaway

If she was simple it would have been easy to help her. She could have made it with a little luck. – Arthur Miller

A professional amateur. – Laurence Olivier

Directing her was like directing Lassie. You needed fourteen takes to get each one of them right. – Otto Preminger

Anyone can remember lines, but it takes a real artist to come on the set and not know her lines and give the performance she did. – Billy Wilder

I have never met anyone as utterly mean as Marilyn Monroe. Nor as utterly fabulous on the screen, and that includes Garbo. – Billy Wilder

She has breasts like granite and a brain like Swiss cheese, full of holes. Extracting a performance from her is like pulling teeth. – Billy Wilder

As near genius as any actress I ever knew. – Joshua Logan

She was born afraid. She never got over it. In the end fear killed her.

– Pete Martin

There's a broad with her future behind her. – Constance Bennett

She had curves in places other women don't even have places. – Cybill Shepherd

An arrogant little tail-twitcher who learned to throw sex in your face. – Nunnally Johnson

A vacuum with nipples. – Otto Preminger

Popular opinion, and all that goes to promote it, is a horrible unsteady conveyance for life, and she was exploited beyond anyone's means. – Laurence Olivier

Montgomery, Bernard (1887–1976)
British Field Marshal who through his waspish personality became famous, especially when he commanded the victorious Eighth Army in North Africa in 1942. He has been best played on TV by Ian Richardson, especially in Ike. Trevor Reid played him in The Longest Day and Michael Bates in Patton. An exciting and amusing film of 1958, I Was Monty's Double, featured his wartime stand-in, Clifton James. His insistence on having a full English breakfast on the battlefield is one of the derivations of the expression 'the full Monty', given new life by the box-office success in 1997 of the British film about male strippers.

Montgomery, Bruce (1921–1978)
English composer, conductor, and organist, a former teacher, in films from 1948. Educated at Oxford University, where he was a close friend of poet Philip Larkin, he is possibly better known for writing detective novels (as Edmund Crispin) featuring literary critic Professor Gervase Fen, the first being published while he was still an undergraduate. His other compositions included a Coronation anthem, written with Kingsley Amis. Alcoholism and difficulty in finishing his scores on time curtailed his movie career.

Moore, Dudley (1935–2002)

English comic actor, writer, musician and composer, who unexpectedly became a Hollywood star in the late 70s. Born in London, he won an organ scholarship to Oxford University, and became resident composer at the Royal Court Theatre, as well as playing piano with jazz groups. Despite being self-conscious of his height – he is 5 feet 2 inches – and club-foot, he was a natural performer who found fame with Peter Cook, Alan Bennett and Jonathan Miller in the revue Beyond the Fringe in 1960. A hilarious partnership with Cook followed, embracing records, television and film, until Cook's heavy drinking brought it to an end. In Hollywood, he became a star with '10', in a role that George Segal had walked away from (in 1997, Segal replaced him when Barbra Streisand fired him from The Mirror Has Two Faces), but a succession of poor films followed. He also had a career as a concert pianist. In 1999, he announced he was suffering from the degenerative neurological condition, Progressive Supranuclear Palsy, and also set up a charity, the Dudley Moore Research Fund for PSP. Married four times, including to actresses Suzy Kendall and Tuesday Weld. He also had a long relationship with actress Susan Anton.

“ I keep waiting for Chuck Napier to become a really big movie actor, but it seems so far it's been slightly out of his reach … I think he's one of America's finest actors. – Jonathan Demme

Napier, Diana (1905–1982) (Molly Ellis)
English leading lady of the 30s. Born in Bath, Somerset, she began on stage and, after several bit parts in silent films, was given a five-year contract, at £20 a week, by Alexander Korda, who chose her to fit a female stereotype that he described as 'a high-class bitch'. She retired in the mid-30s, making a brief return to the screen in the late 40s. Her second husband was opera singer Richard Tauber.

Napoleon Bonaparte
has been impersonated on screen by Charles Boyer in Marie Walewska/Conquest, Esmé Percy in Invitation to the Waltz, Emile Drain in Madame sans Gêne and Les Perles de la Couronne, Rollo Lloyd in Anthony Adverse, Julien Bertheau in Madame, Marlon Brando in Désirée, Arnold Moss in The Black Book, Pierre Mondy in Austerlitz, Herbert Lom in several films including The Young Mr Pitt and War and Peace, Eli Wallach in The Adventures of Gerard, Rod Steiger in Waterloo, Kenneth Haig in Eagle in a Cage, Henryk Baranowski in Pan Tadeusz, Ian Holm in The Emperor's New Clothes and Daniel Auteuil in N – Napoleon..

Abel Gance's 1925 film Napoleon (with Albert Dieudonne) is noted for the first use of a triptych screen corresponding very closely to Cinerama. It was revived with international success in 1980, in a version painstakingly reassembled by Kevin Brownlow, who in 1983 published a book about it.

Narcejac, Thomas (1908–1998) (Pierre Ayraud)
French thriller writer and screenwriter, in collaboration with Pierre Boileau. Born in Rochefort-sur-mer, he studied philosophy and literature at the Sorbonne, and worked as a teacher. After writing on his own, in 1951, he began working with Boileau, who devised the plots, while he wrote the stories, which, with their macabre suspense, appealed to many directors.

❝For an actor whose chief charm was his complete 'ease' and naturalness on the stage, almost in the du Maurier tradition, it was quite extraordinary to realize, when one played with Owen, how much he relied on sheer mechanics. Every gesture, every move was planned beforehand, and adhered to rigidly. – Jean Webster-Brough

Narizzano, Silvio (1927–)
Canadian-born director, of Italian-American parents, in British TV in the 50s and films from the 60s. Born in Montreal, he was educated at Bishop's University, Quebec. He began as an actor in Ottawa before working in Canadian television and, later, in Britain.

Nazimova, Alla (1879–1945) (Miriam Leventon)
Russian-born stage actress who made a number of films in America. Born in Yalta, she studied at the Moscow Academy and joined the Moscow Art Theatre under Stanislavsky. After appearing on the Broadway stage in the early 1900s she decided to remain in the United States and became an acclaimed star. She was in films from 1916; in the mid-20s she went back to the stage, returning to Hollywood for a few appearances in the 40s. Married Russian actor Paul Orleneff and actor-director Charles Bryant, who directed her in some of her early silents. Her lovers included Mercedes de Acosta, Eva Le Gallienne, Dorothy Arzner and Natacha Rambova. When her finances became problematic in later life, she turned her Hollywood home into a hotel, the Garden of Allah.

Neagle, Dame Anna (1904–1986) (Florence Marjorie Robertson)
British leading lady, a former chorus dancer who, in partnership with producer and, later, her husband Herbert Wilcox, built up a formidable film gallery of historical heroines. Born in Forest

Gate, London, she was on stage from 1925, and also worked in cabaret as a dancer in the late 20s. Her success dated from the film of Goodnight Vienna, starring Jack Buchanan. After Evelyn Laye turned down the role opposite Buchanan, Wilcox went to call on him, saw Neagle performing with him on stage, and signed her for the film. When film roles grew hard to find, she returned successfully to the stage. She was made a Dame of the British Empire in 1969.

Autobiography: 1949, It's Been Fun. 1974, There's Always Tomorrow.

Produced three Frankie Vaughan films 58–61; returned to stage.

Negri, Pola (1897–1987) (Appolonia Chalupek)

Polish-born leading lady with experience on German stage and screen; went to Hollywood in the 20s and was popular until sound came in. Born in Janowa, she worked as a dancer and violinist before beginning on stage in Warsaw in 1913. After making films for director Ernst Lubitsch in Germany, she went to the US in the early 20s. Married three times; her lovers included Charlie Chaplin and Rudolph Valentino, whose funeral she attended dressed in black, accompanied by a nurse and a doctor, all in white. In the 30s she moved back to Europe, made films in England, and was later allegedly romantically linked with Adolf Hitler. From the early 40s, she settled in the United States.

Neilan, Marshall "Mickey" (1891–1958)

Leading American director of silents who had a meteoric rise in the 20s. Born in San Bernardino, California, he acted from childhood and began in films after becoming chauffeur to D. W. Griffith. He became a leading actor and occasional writer of silents, but from 1916 concentrated on directing. He was frequently Mary Pickford's leading man and directed some of her best films, but their collaboration came to an end in 1929 when she hired him to direct her in Forever Yours, and abandoned the film when it was two-thirds made. From the late 20s, his efficacy began to suffer as his alcoholism interfered with his directing; he was virtually unemployable by the late 30s. He later worked as a taxi driver and an extra, and in the mid-40s was hired as a writer by Twentieth Century-Fox. He left instructions that, on his death, no one should accompany his body to the cemetery; instead, 15 of his closest friends held a wake at a Hollywood hotel, where, on the chair he was accustomed to sit in, was a sign saying 'Reserved for Mickey Neilan' and, set beside it, an empty glass and an open bottle of beer. Died of cancer. His second wife was actress Blanche Sweet (1922–29).

❝ Those were the days … We had fun, loved to go to the studio, and hated to go home. Today they hate to go to the studio, they have no laughs and are tickled to duck home. – M.N., on his deathbed, to Mary Pickford

Mickey was one of the most delightful, aggravating, gifted and charming human beings I have ever known. There were times when I could cheerfully have throttled him – especially at his frequent failures to make an appearance on the set until after luncheon, keeping a large company waiting at considerable expense. – Mary Pickford

❝Film-makers can't work today without money from television. Then our work is passed over to television and destroyed completely. It's impossible to see a story from beginning to end on television without interruption. Television is not cinema – you're at home with the lights, the telephone, the children. I want people to go to the cinema to experience film. – M.N.

He's a very, very bad actor, but he absolutely loves doing it. – D.N. on himself

Actors don't retire, they just get offered fewer roles. – D.N.

I suppose everybody becomes an actor because they want to be liked. I do enjoy being liked, but I don't work hard at it. I try to do the best I can for my age. – D.N.

I have a face that's a cross between two pounds of halibut and an explosion in an old-clothes closet. If it isn't mobile, it's dead. – D.N.

What I remember most about Niven's house in Beverly Hills was the pool's changing room. On the men's side he had this see-through mirror. We spent quite a lot of time in there, depending on the female guests of the day, of course. – John Mills

Novello, Ivor (1893–1951) (Ivor Davies)
Handsome Welsh matinée idol, composer, actor-manager, playwright and screenwriter. Born in Cardiff, he first gained fame as the composer of the First World War song 'Keep the Home Fires Burning', before becoming Britain's most popular silent film star, a stage actor and dramatist. In the early 30s he went to Hollywood, under contract to MGM, where he was unhappily employed as a writer, working uncredited on Mata Hari 31 and Lovers Courageous 32, among others. MGM also bought as a vehicle for Joan Crawford his play Party, written during his spare time at the studio and featuring rivalries between actresses Miranda Clayfoot (based on Tallulah Bankhead) and Mrs MacDonald (otherwise Mrs Patrick Campbell), but it was never made. He appeared in four British films on his return, but then decided to quit the cinema for the theatre, where he scored his greatest success as the star and creator of such romantic, large-scale musicals as Glamorous Night, which also starred Mary Ellis, Careless Rapture, The Dancing Years, also with Mary Ellis, and King's Rhapsody. His lovers included poet Siegfried Sassoon. Died of a heart attack.

❝ It's just like Marie Antoinette's flight to Varennes! – I.N. to his long-time companion, actor Bobbie Andrews, when he was collected at midnight from Wormwood Scrubs, where he had served a month's imprisonment in 1944 for misusing a wartime petrol allowance so that he could drive his Rolls-Royce at weekends.

I am an entertainer. Empty seats and good opinions mean nothing to me. – I.N.

On stage, every performance is an event, because you have a living, breathing audience to conquer. You know immediately whether you are doing something that pleases or offends, and you can adjust yourself accordingly. But the camera, which is never supposed to lie, makes no response whatsoever, and, even if the director seems pleased, he is only one man. – I.N.

I love seeing films, but I hate doing them. I hate the hours one has to keep. I have never been able to get up early in the morning without a feeling of impending death. – I.N.

He was beautiful. And he was a darling. However opinions may differ about his other attributes, on these two there is total agreement: his good looks, and his good nature. – Sandy Wilson

He was mischievous and naughty and everything under the sun, but his saving grace was that he was utterly sincere. – Mary Ellis

At heart Larry was what the French call a cabotin. The term is difficult to translate – not exactly a ham: a performer, a vulgarian, someone who lives and dies for acting. – Tony Richardson

A giant, a perfectionist, a man of fantastic loyalty and abiding courage, who worked himself to a standstill for the theatre and at almost negligible material gain to himself. – Robert Stephens

The thing about Larry was that he was jealous of everyone, whatever they did, if he felt they did whatever they did better than he could. This gnawing dissatisfaction made him terribly unhappy all his life. – Robert Stephens

Famous line (Wuthering Heights) 'I cannot live without my life; I cannot live without my soul.'

O'Sullivan, Maureen (1911–1998)

Irish leading lady in Hollywood, the mother of Mia Farrow, and best known for playing the scantily clad Jane to Johnny Weissmuller's Tarzan in six films. Born in Boyle, she was spotted in Dublin and offered a film role by director Frank Borzage. She made a few forgettable films for Fox, where her main function was to be used by the studio as a bargaining ploy with actress Janet Gaynor, then involved in a contractual dispute. When Fox let her go, MGM signed her to star in Tarzan the Ape Man; a succession of shy, reticent roles followed. From the 40s, she made fewer films following her marriage to director John Farrow (1936–63), with whom she had seven children, including actresses Tisa Farrow and Stephanie Farrow. Later, she acted mainly on stage and television. She was romantically linked with actor Robert Ryan. Apart from Jane, her best roles were as Henrietta in The Barretts of Wimpole Street, Dora in David Copperfield, Jane Bennet in Pride and Prejudice, and Norma in Hannah and Her Sisters.

Ozu, Yasujiro (1903–1963)
Distinguished Japanese director, frequently examining the tensions of family life, and noted for his refined and seemingly simple style. Born in Tokyo, he worked as a teacher before becoming an assistant cameraman at the Shochiku studios. He began directing in the mid 1920s, at first making comedies. His later films concentrated on middle-class family life. His films were notable for their careful composition and formal concentration on domestic life; he kept his camera at a low angle, looking up at the characters, an approach described by director Masahiro Shinoda, as the point of view of a small deity observing human action.

Pascal, Gabriel (1894–1954) (Gabor Lehöl)
Romanian-born producer and director, a former actor, of somewhat mysterious origins. After working in Germany and Italy, he came to Britain in the 30s, won the esteem of Bernard Shaw and persuaded him to part, for a token payment, with the film rights to his plays, which many had tried to do and failed. His version of Caesar and Cleopatra was the most expensive British film of its time, costing around £1.25m, more than twice its original budget, which did much to damage the reputation of the Rank Organization, and grounded his career. Failed projects included a version of Shaw's St Joan starring Katharine Hepburn, The Devil's Disciple with Clark Gable and Cary Grant, and a film of the life of Gandhi. He was also a prime mover in turning Pygmalion into the musical My Fair Lady.

Pasolini, Pier Paolo (1922–1975)
Italian director, novelist, poet and critic. Born in Bologna, he was expelled from the Communist Party for homosexuality, but remained passionately proletarian in his attitudes. He started in films as a writer, before becoming an increasingly controversial director and social commentator. He was beaten and run over near the seaside town of Ostia, allegedly by a homosexual prostitute, though there is evidence that his murder was committed by right-wing thugs. A documentary, Pasolini: An Italian Crime, made by Marco Tullio Giordana in 1995, comes to the conclusion that more than one person was involved in his death.

Pasternak, Boris (1890–1960)
Russian novelist, author of Dr Zhivago.

Pasternak, Joe (1901–1991)
Hungarian producer in Hollywood during the golden years; especially identified with cheerful light musicals. Born in Szilagy-Somlyo, he moved to the US in the early 20s and began in the film industry in a lowly capacity. He worked for Universal in Berlin from the mid 20s, where he produced successful musical movies. Returning to Hollywood in the mid 30s, he helped save the studio from bankruptcy with a succesion of musicals starring Deanna Durbin, directed by his former Berlin associate, Henry Koster. He later revived the career of Marlene Dietrich by casting her in Destry Rides Again. In the 40s he moved to work for MGM, where he was involved in the early films of Esther Williams and in attempting to make a durable musical star of the egocentric and overweight Mario Lanza.

Percy, Esmé (1887–1957)
Distinguished English stage actor, noted for his performances in the plays of George Bernard Shaw. Born in London, of French origin, he studied drama at the Brussels Conservatoire, and was also trained by Sarah Bernhardt, having told her he would throw himself into the Seine if she did not let him join her company. He was on stage in England from 1904. As a young actor he was noted for his looks: when actor-manager Herbert Beerbohm Tree invited him to an intimate supper, Lady Tree paused on her way out and said, 'The port is on the sideboard, Herbert, and remember it's adultery just the same.' But after a dog removed one of his eyes, and he substituted a glass one, and his nose was broken in an accident, his choice of screen roles was somewhat limited.

Perkins, Anthony (1932–1992)
Gangly American leading actor who became forever associated with the role of Norman Bates in Psycho, directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Born in New York City, the son of actor Osgood Perkins, he was acting in summer stock at the age of 15 and made his film debut five years later. He played with success young men, troubled and unsure of themselves, but found maturer roles scarce. Married the sister of actress Marisa Berenson, photographer and occasional actress Berry Berenson (1948-2001), who died when her hijacked plane crashed into the World Trade Center. He was romantically involved with actor Tab Hunter. Died of AIDS.

Perkins, Osgood (1892–1937)
American character actor, mainly on the stage, the father of Anthony Perkins. Born in West Newton, Massachusetts, he studied French at Harvard University and turned to acting in his late 20s, first in silent films, before making his reputation on the Broadway stage, often in psychologically disturbed roles. Died from a heart attack, following the first night's performance of a new play in Washington. His one great regret was that he was passed over in favour of Adolphe Menjou for the role of newspaper editor Walter Burns in the film of The Front Page, which he had originated on the Broadway stage. His best screen performance was as the gangster Johnny Lovo in Scarface.

✪For entrancing the world, and for knowing when to stop. Little Lord Fauntleroy.

“The appeal of the world's sweetheart is not well understood in the 80s. Her screen image was ever-childlike, sweet and demure, the antithesis of today's heroines. Alistair Cooke said: 'She was the girl every young man wanted to have – as his sister.'

Yet on first encounter D. W. Griffith told her: 'You're too little and too fat, but I might give you a job.'

Later, he ruefully recollected: 'She never stopped listening and learning.'

She was soon telling Adolph Zukor: 'I can't afford to work for only ten thousand dollars a week.'

And Sam Goldwyn reflected: 'It took longer to make one of Mary's contracts than it did to make one of Mary's pictures.'

Spoiled by success she may have been, but never blind to her own failings: 'I never liked one of my pictures in its entirety.'

By 1929 she was surprisingly intolerant of her screen image: 'I am sick of Cinderella parts, of wearing rags and tatters. I want to wear smart clothes and play the lover.'

Richard Griffith and Arthur Mayer thought the secret of her success was that: 'Her sweetness and light were tempered by a certain realism. In spite of her creed, the Glad Girl knew it was no cinch to make everything come out right. Nothing could have been more in tune with an era which combined limitless optimism with a belief that 'git up and git' was necessary to make optimism come true.'

But Mabel Normand at a press conference struck a sour note: 'Say anything you like, but don't say I want to work. That sounds like Mary Pickford, that prissy bitch.'

I think cinema's become more and more hysterical, more and more demanding of people, or rather not demanding of people, playing to people's worst instincts, the vulgarity of cutting, the excitement. – H.P.

One of the most appalling... the most horrifying experiences of my life is to go to the cinema and see the trailers. They are really deeply expressive of the society in which we live. They are so violent and appalling, and hard and sharp and vulgar. – H.P.

When Pinter turned 50 I was asked to say something and couldn't think of anything. Later I thought there should be a two-minute silence. – Alan Bennett

American poet, story-writer and manic depressive, whose tortured life as well as his strange tales have been eagerly seized upon by film-makers. Griffith made The Life of Edgar Allan Poe in 1909, and in 1912 another version was disguised as The Raven. In 1915 Charles Brabin made another film called The Raven with Henry B. Walthall as Poe; a few months earlier Griffith had released his own alternative version under the title The Avenging Conscience. The next film called The Raven, in 1935, starred Karloff and Lugosi and had nothing to do with Poe's life, being merely an amalgam of his stories; but in 1942 Fox brought out The Loves of Edgar Allan Poe starring Shepperd Strudwick; and in 1951 MGM made a curious melodrama called Man with a Cloak, in which the dark stranger who solved the mystery signed himself 'Dupin' and was played by Joseph Cotten in the Poe manner.

Of the stories, The Mystery of Marie Roget was filmed by Universal in 1931 and 1942; The Tell-Tale Heart was told as an MGM short directed by Jules Dassin in 1942, by a British company with Stanley Baker in 1950, by UPA as a cartoon narrated by James Mason in 1954, by an independent American company in a film known as both Manfish and Calypso in 1956 (the film also claimed to be partly based on The Gold Bug) and by the Danzigers in Britain in 1960. The Fall of the House of Usher was filmed in France by Jean Epstein in 1929, in Britain by semi-professionals in 1950, in Hollywood by Roger Corman in 1960, and in South Africa by Alan Birkinshaw in 1988. Universal released films called The Black Cat in 1934 and 1941, both claiming to be 'suggested' by Poe's tale; in fact, neither had anything at all to do with it, but the genuine story was told in a German film called The Living Dead in 1933, and in Corman's 1962 Tales of Terror. The Pit and the Pendulum was filmed in 1913 and 1961, and the central idea has been borrowed by many film-makers without credit, most recently by the 'Uncle' boys in One Spy Too Many. The Premature Burial was filmed straight in 1962, and around the same time TV's Thriller series presented a fairly faithful adaptation; the idea was also used in 1934 in The Crime of Dr Crespi, a low-budgeter starring Erich Von Stroheim. The Murders in the Rue Morgue was filmed in 1914 and 1932, turned up again in 3-D in 1954 under the title Phantom of the Rue Morgue, and was remade under the original title in 1971. Other Poe stories filmed once include The Bells 13, The Facts in the Case of M. Valdemar in Tales of Terror 62, The Masque of the Red Death 64 and 89, and The Tomb of Ligeia 64.

Poitier, Sidney (1927–)
Handsome, dignified American leading actor and director; his success in the late 60s helped to break the race barrier. Born in Miami, Florida, of Bahaman parents, he was brought up in poverty on Cat Island and Nassau. He returned to the US at the age of 16 to work in menial jobs before answering an advert for actors from the American Negro Theatre, eventually appearing on Broadway in the late 40s. From the mid 70s he turned increasingly to directing. He was awarded an honorary Oscar in 2002 'for his extraordinary performances and unique presence on the screen and for representing the industry with dignity, style and intelligence.'

❝ Nothing good will happen while there are still cinemas that are shit heaps and critics who only like popular films when they are thirty years old. – D.P., 1975

I'm not afraid to fail, providing I fail honourably. The only thing I don't want is to end up being an irrelevant 70-year-old egomaniac. – D.P.

While our technical ability to communicate grows at an exponential rate, there seems no corresponding increase in our ability to understand each other. – D.P.

In his parting comments at Columbia 10 years ago, Puttnam told his staff, 'I am neither St George nor Don Quixote. I am just a European motion picture producer who crossed the Atlantic to ask a few questions.' Well, he asked his questions. The answer was: 'Get lost.' – Variety, 1997

I think that if David had kept an open mind and a closed mouth, he might have been successful. – Ray Stark

Rand, Ayn (1905–1982) (Alisa Rosenbaum)
American novelist and screenwriter. According to an American Library of Congress survey in the 90s, her novel Atlas Shrugged is the book that has had most influence on American lives after the Bible. Born in St Petersburg, she fled the Russian Revolution and arrived in the US in the mid-20s, finding work as an extra in Hollywood and, from the early 30s, as a script reader at Paramount. She sold an original script, Red Pawn, to Universal in 1932 as a vehicle for Tala BIRRELL; it was later acquired by Paramount for Marlene DIETRICH and Joseph VON STERNBERG, but was never produced. In the mid-40s she briefly worked as a writer for producer Hal WALLIS, but quit Hollywood after seeing a rough cut of The Fountainhead, declaring 'the people involved were not worthy of the assignment'. Barbara STANWYCK had persuaded Warner's to buy the screen rights to The Fountainhead; when the role she wanted went to Patricia NEAL, Stanwyck left the studio. Producer Albert S. Ruddy announced that he was going to film Atlas Shrugged in 1972, but plans fell through when Rand insisted on having script approval. Later, Sterling Silliphant wrote a version for an NBC TV mini-series, but it was never made. She was a founding member of the MOTION PICTURE ALLIANCE FOR THE PRESERVATION OF AMERICAN IDEALS. Married actor Frank O'Connor. Her works preach her Objectivist philosophy, a gospel of rational self-interest and unfettered capitalism. She was played by Helen Mirren in a TV film in 1999.

Rank, J. Arthur (1888–1972) (Lord Rank)
British flour magnate who entered films in the mid-30s in the hope of promoting interest in religion. Formed or took over so many companies including production, distribution and exhibition that by the mid-40s he was accused of monopolistic tendencies. His influence was generally excellent, and he encouraged independent producers (sometimes unwisely), but his organization generally suffered from a preponderance of accountants unable to understand the ingredients of a good film. Without their financial advice, however, the empire might well have perished altogether. At its height it fostered such production companies as the Archers, Cineguild, Wessex, Individual and Two Cities. In recent years the film side of the organization has proved less important than its hotels, bowling alleys and such developments as xerox-copying; but it includes Odeon and Gaumont Theatres, Rank Film Distributors, Pinewood Studios, Denham Laboratories, etc.

Biography: 1952, Mr Rank by Alan Wood. 1993, J. Arthur Rank and the British Film Industry by Geoffrey Macnab.

❂ For doing his best. Henry V.

❝ Methodist principles may seem a curious guide to the promotion of motion pictures, but at least they gave J. Arthur Rank a considerable start over other film promoters who had no principles at all. – Alan Wood

If I could recall to you some of my various adventures and experiences in the film world, it would I think be as plain to you as it is to me that I was being led by God. – J.A.R.

Rat Pack (aka the Clan)
The name given to the showbiz entourage surrounding Frank Sinatra in the 50s and 60s. Its members included Dean Martin, Sammy Davis Jnr, Joey Bishop, and Peter Lawford, though both Davis and Lawford were banished at times. The term was coined by Time magazine, but it had its origins in the Holmby Hills Rat Pack, who were the drinking friends of Humphrey Bogart. The Pack gathered for several films with Sinatra, in which they seemed to have more fun than the audience: Ocean's Eleven 60; Sergeants 3 62; and Robin and the Seven Hoods 64. The only known concert recording of the group, Frank, Dean & Sammy: An Evening with the Rat Pack, made on closed-circuit TV in 1965, was shown on television in 1998. A TV biopic, The Rat Pack 98, starred Ray Liotta as Frank Sinatra, Joe Mantegna as Dean Martin, Don Cheadle as Sammy Davis, Jnr, Angus McFayden as Peter Lawford, Bobby Slayton as Joey Bishop, Megan Dodds as May Britt, Barbara Niven as Marilyn Monroe, and Deborah Kara Unger as Ava Gardner.

Books: 1961, Sinatra and His Rat Pack by Richard Gehman. 1998, Rat Pack Confidential by Shawn Levy.

“ In Frank's Rat Pack personal homage to their 'leader' was all important: Frank was addressed as 'the pope', 'the general', and 'el dago.' – Kitty Kelley

Redford, Robert (1937–)

Engaging, blond American leading actor and director who, although working within the studio system, has encouraged independent film-makers. Born in Santa Monica, California, he went to the University of Colorado on a baseball scholarship, but dropped out and later studied art and architecture at the Pratt Institute, New York, and at the American Academy of Dramatic Art. He began working on television and in the theatre, becoming a star with Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid in 1969. His best roles so far have been as Johnny Hooker in The Sting and Bob Woodward in All the President's Men. He is said to have turned down the leading roles in Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, The Graduate, Rosemary's Baby, Love Story and The Day of the Jackal; as a director, he scored with Ordinary People and Quiz Show. He set up the Sundance Film Institute in Utah for independent film-makers and in 1997 announced the creation of Sundance Cinemas, a venture with a major distributor to set up a chain of cinemas for the screening of independent films. In 2002, he was awarded an honorary Oscar as 'creator of Sundance, inspiration to independent and innovative filmmakers everywhere.' Married once and divorced, he has three children.

Reed, Sir Carol (1906–1976)

Distinguished British director who after a peak in the late 40s seemed to lose his way; his infrequent later films, though always civilized, were generally disappointing. Born in London, the illegitimate son of actor Herbert Beerbohm Tree, he began as an actor in the theatre, where he also directed and formed a close working relationship with Edgar Wallace, who stimulated his interest in films: he began as a dialogue director, working under Basil Dean at Ealing Studios. He was at his best in collaborations with writer Graham Greene on The Fallen Idol and The Third Man. Married actresses Diana Wynyard (1943–47) and Penelope Ward. His lovers included actress Jessie Matthews and novelist Daphne Du Maurier.

Reinhardt, Max (1873–1943) (Max Goldman)

Influential Austrian theatrical director and producer, a former actor. He studied drama in Vienna, became a leading actor in Berlin and went on to run theatres in Berlin and Salzburg. After the Nazis came to power in the early 30s he settled in America. He made three German silents between 1908 and 1914 that reveal little of his skills. But the style of his spectacular productions, influenced by the theories of Edward Gordon Craig, were captured in his one sound film of A Midsummer Night's Dream, 35, which was co-directed by William Dieterle; its failure at the box-office and with critics brought a sudden end to his seven-picture contract with Warners. In the late 30s he established a school for Hollywood hopefuls on Sunset Boulevard, where the teachers included Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Samson Raphaelson and John Huston, but it was not a success and he returned to work in the theatre. Those from his German companies who carried his influence into film included Ernst Lubitsch, Paul Wegener, Ernst Matray, William Dieterle and F.W. Murnau.

❝ We don't believe in the 'new film' but rather in the 'new cinema'. The cinema is a place where 'film' happens. The dark room, the mystery that constitute the 'audience', a glowing screen, music, voices and sounds that fill the room, an event, a fluidity that sweeps up the audience, which needs it as an integral part of cinema … that's 'cinema'. – E.R.

The filmmaker should develop a feeling for the fact that when he is filming, what he sees, what he hears, is being transported into the past. The sorrow we feel about the transitory nature of happiness can never be greater than in the moment of filming. – E.R.

Renoir, Jean (1894–1979)
Distinguished French director, screenwriter and actor, the son of artist Auguste Renoir and brother of actor Pierre Renoir. Born in Paris, he worked as a potter before forming his own production company to make films. After a hesitant start, he directed a series of masterpieces from the early 30s, beginning with Boudu Saved From Drowning and climaxing with The Rules of the Game, though the latter was a commercial flop and was banned for being demoralizing to the French just before the outbreak of World War II. He moved to the United States in 1941, but found it difficult to work within the Hollywood system. He returned to France after the war and showed some evidence of his previous exuberance with French Can-Can, a nostalgic celebration of the nineteenth-century world of Parisian entertainment. The first of his two wives was actress Catherine Hessling (who had been one of his father's models).

Autobiography: 1962, Renoir, My Father. 1973, My Life and My Films. Letters by Jean Renoir edited by Lorraine Lo Bianco and David Thompson.

✪ For being the most French and universal of directors. The Rules of the Game/La Règle du Jeu.

❝ Renoir has a lot of talent, but he isn't one of us. – Darryl F. Zanuck

Life was not so much the subject as the stuff of his movies, spilling over the edges of his frames. – Newsweek

Only when style is confused with meaningless flourishes does Renoir's economy of expression seem inadequate for textbook critics. – Andrew Sarris, 1968

My dream is of a craftsman's cinema in which the author can express himself as directly as the painter in his paintings or the writer in his books. – J.R.

A director makes only one film in his life. Then he breaks it into pieces and makes it again. – J.R.

The saving grace of the cinema is that with patience, and a little love, we may arrive at that wonderfully complex creature which is called man. – J.R.

“ I can't imagine what kids today would be like if violence on TV and in the movies hadn't prepared us for the violence that is out there in the real world. – C.R.

I have life rage. What am I going to do with it? I can't kick the shit out of someone. I can't yell or be constantly rude to people, because that's unacceptable. I have a therapist on each coast. I've had a problem with that, too, because I've had a different personality when I go to different ones. – C.R., 1998
